It was a busy day today, but that's finally done. I've gotten finished with all the things I need to do, and I'm ready to relax. I'd like to be taken away somewhere, to imagine myself in a world with sorcerers and warlocks, but, I don't have time to get together with friends to play something like League of Legends, and I don't have enough energy left to play something that's real time. Rather, I'd like to play something turn based, something with a rich story and well developed characters that I can inhabit, but, maybe a game that, while having complicated mechanics, can be left alone for a while and tend to making food and maybe watching something on the side.

What I want is something like Dungeons and Dragons. A game that will immerse me in a world that it creates, and allow myself to inhabit a character who has particular attributes. Like Wizards Chess in Harry Potter, I want to see my character and glory in my progress as he finally vanquishes the last enemy remaining, and I can further his development with new equipment and skills.
